

No Fake is Worth a Thousand Bucks

Contributed by Richard Brown
Last Updated Thursday, 16 August 2007

There are several web sites on the web that sell fake Rolexes for near to over $1,000 a pop. This is ridiculous. There are no counterfeit watches that are worth that kind of money. Stay away from anyone who says that they have the "best" Rolex Submariner, and they're only charging you $750 today.

```
{kl_php} include("geo/content_ad.inc"); {/kl_php}
```

Many of these sites try to justify their high prices with infotainment about "27 jewels instead of 25 jewels" (bullshit. There are no "27" jewel movements that are used in these watches) or how their gold is "triple-wrapped", not plated (another lie; all the gold on these watches is plated, just to different degrees of thickness and quality).

The BEST of these watches are made with OEM ETA movements (probably refurbished); the worst are made with Asian-made ETA copies (or worse, Japanese Citizen or Miyota copies) that are NOT up to the quality of the genuine Rolex movement, no matter how hard you squint and pretend your second hand is smooth-sweeping.

Realistically, if you're going to buy a fake, don't pay these insane prices. The dealers are buying these watches for $50 wholesale, and then marking up the price and raking in the dough. Just don't let it be your dough.